Announcements*

Digestive Tract Paralysis (DTP)

Digestive Tract Paralysis (DTP) is the overall umbrella term used to refer to any paralytic condition of the digestive tract. This type of paralysis is just like one of any other organs where the body's ability to move food through the digestive tract is inhibited.

In a normal stomach, the contents are emptied into the small intestines at a reasonable pace. But with gastroparesis, the muscle contractions that move the food along the digestive tract do not function properly. Therefore, the stomach empties too slowly. This is also known as delayed gastric emptying.

In rare cases, the condition is life-threatening especially if ignored or neglected. Fluctuations in blood sugar levels and nutritional deficits may also occur if left untreated.

Signs & Symptoms

- excruciating abdominal pain, fullness after a few bites of food, bloating, reduced appetite, dehydration, heartburn, reflux, excessive belching, and sudden weight loss.
- Some patients have also reported vomiting and frequent nausea. As with any other disease, it is best treated in its early stages.

Diagnosis & Treatment

- A gastric or duodenal manometry, abdominal scan, as well as a gastric emptying scan will be performed to diagnose the condition. Once a diagnosis is made, the proper treatment will be prescribed.
- Certain medications may be recommended in addition to a change in diet. Certain foods may help ease the condition.
