Church of Christ

*Wednesday,
March 13, 2024*

The background of the image is a soft, out-of-focus sunset or sunrise sky, transitioning from a pale pink at the top to a warm orange and yellow at the bottom. In the foreground, the dark silhouettes of two hands are raised in a gesture of prayer or praise, with fingers slightly spread. The hands are positioned on the left side of the frame, with the right hand higher than the left.

Did you know?
March is National Colorectal
Cancer
Month.

Brought to you by:
FHCOC Care Team
Ministry

How does colorectal cancer start?

Most colorectal cancers start as a growth on the inner lining of the colon or rectum. These growths are called polyps.

Polyps are quite common, especially as you get older. Most polyps are benign, or noncancerous. Some types of polyps can change into cancer over time (usually over many years). The chance of a polyp turning into cancer depends on the type of polyp it is. There are different types of polyps.

- Adenomatous polyps (adenomas): These polyps sometimes change into cancer. Because of this, adenomas are called a precancerous condition. The 3 types of adenomas are tubular, villous, and tubulovillous. Tubular adenomas are the most common type of adenomatous polyps. Villous adenomas are the least common type of adenomatous polyps, but are more likely to change into cancer.
- Hyperplastic polyps and inflammatory polyps: These polyps are more common, but in general they are not precancerous. Some people with large (more than 1cm) hyperplastic polyps might need colorectal cancer screening with colonoscopy more often.
- Sessile serrated polyps (SSP) and traditional serrated adenomas (TSA): These polyps are often treated like adenomas because they have a higher risk of changing into cancer.

Other factors that can make a polyp more likely to contain cancer or increase someone's risk of developing colorectal cancer include:

- Size: If a polyp larger than 1 cm
- Number: If more than 3 polyps are found
- Histology: If dysplasia is seen in the polyp. Dysplasia means that the cells look abnormal, but they haven't yet become cancer.
